TRIBŪNŪS (tribus), i, m. properly a president, chief or commander of a tribe (tribus, h. e. a third part; for Romulus divided the Romans into three parts, which were called tribus, and over each placed a tribunes, according to Ascon. in Verr. 3, 5); Hence, in general, a president, a chief, commander, a tribune; of these, there were several kinds: — 1. Cic. Tribuni Ærarii, or, Plin. æris, tribunes of the treasury; persons (not magistrates) who assisted the quaestor; they received money from him and paid it, for example, to the soldiers. Cato. When, according to the Lex Aurelia, the administration of justice was divided between three orders of the state, the senate, knights, and people, the tribuni ærarii became judges on the part of the people. But Augustus Cæsar threw them out again. Cic. and Sueton. — 2. Tribunus Celerum, the captain or commander of the royal body-guard. Liv. — 3. Liv. Tribuni militum, or, Cic. Tribuni militares, military tribunes, tribunes of the army, tribunes of the soldiers. Often, also, called simply Tribunus, tribuni. Liv. and Plin. Ep. There were at first three of them to a legion, each commanding a thousand men; afterwards, when the number of soldiers in a legion was increased, there were four; and at last six. The tribunes belonged only to the legion, and so to the Roman infantry; the officers of the cavalry, auxiliary troops, &c. were called præfecti. The tribunes were called comitanti, when elected by the people in comitanti: rafuli, when created by the generals. Liv. In later times, each tribune seems to have commanded a cohort; hence, Cæs. and Plin. Ep. Tribuni cohortum. There are also mentioned Tribuni laticlavii, and angusticlavii, h. e. who wore a tunica laticlavata, or angusticlavata. Sue- ton. — 4. Tribuni militum consulari potestate, military tribunes with consular power, h. e. that had the same power and dignity as the consuls, were for the first time chosen instead of consuls, A. U. C. 310, and several times afterwards; till at length, after a contention between the plebeians (who wished to have plebeian consuls) and the senate, the consulship was in the year 389 permanently reestablished. (See Liv. 4, 7. sqq.)

5. Tribuni plebis, or plebei, or plebi, tribunes of the people or of the plebeians, were certain magistrates of an inferior rank. The people, oppressed by debt, on account of the avarice of money-lenders, often besought the senate to release them from their obligations to their creditors; receiving no aid from the senate, they at length, A. U. C. 261, removed from Rome to the hill called Mons sacer, and did not return till the senate granted them magistrates for themselves, to be elected from their own body, who should protect them from the oppression of the senate: these officers were the tribuni plebis. Liv. At first there were two, afterwards five, and finally the number was increased to ten, and by virtue of an ordinance they were elected in the comitia tributa. Though chosen from the plebeians, they possessed great power. They could by the word Veto protest against any decrees of the senate, and the proceedings of magistrates, whether prejudicial to the plebeians or not, and their authority was so great that a decree of the senate could not come into force, if the tribunes of the people had protested against it. They were sacro-sancti, h. e. no one was permitted under pain of death to lay hands upon them. The senatus-consulta, or decrees of the senate, were subscribed with the letter T., to show that they were sanctioned by the tribunes. They had vatores, instead of lictors, to wait upon them and obey their commands. They were guardians of the rights of the people against the encroachments of the senate; hence, their doors were not allowed to be closed, even by night, that the people might at all times have free access to them, and one of them was required to be always on the tribunes' seats (subsellia) in the forum, to be ready in case of appeal. They were not allowed to be absent from Rome. One tribune could protest against and invalidate a decree of the rest, and the senate often gained over some one of the tribunes to act against the others. At first they were not senators, h. e. did not sit in the senate, but had a place before the senate-house, where they received the decrees of that body, and either approved or rejected them. To make them more favorable to the senate, it was at last decreed that they should be senators, for, A. U. C. 623, a law was passed, that none but a senator should be made a tribunus plebis. Sylla abridged their power by taking from them the right of proposing laws to the people; but this was afterwards repealed. (Compare Liv. 2, 33.)—When Augustus desired to become absolute, he could do so under no milder name than that of assuming the potestas tribunicia, which denoted the highest power in Rome. Sueton.

Liv. injuriæ, h. e. contra injuriam. Id. periculi, h. e. qui opem fert in periculo. Horat. Nec deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus inciderit, h. e. worthy of such an extricator. Ovid. calls Hercules, Vindex terræ. Justin. Also, with a genit. like ubi, &c.; as, Justin. Nec sane usquam terrarum locum honoratorem senectus habet, any where in the world; so, Terent. An quisquam usquam gentium est æque miser? — Also, any where, h. e. in any thing. Terent. Neque istic, neque alibi tibi usquam erit in me mora, in this nor in any thing else. Cic. Neque esset usquam consilio, aut auctoritatis locus. Sallust. Neque advorsus iram ejus usquam, nisi in avaritia nobilitatis, et pecunia sua spem habere. Cic. Non usquam id quidem dicit, h. e. nusquam; in nullo loco vel libro. — Usquam, for ullius pretii. Terent. Ad. 2, 15. — ¶ Also, to any place, any whither. Cic. Nec vero usquam discedebam, nec, &c. Nepos. Quam usquam se moveret. Horat. Non usquam, for nusquam, to no place, no whither. USQUE (unc.); according to Scaliger, from ὡς κε, ὡς being for ἕως, usque, donec), adv. 1. In a continued course, right on, without ceasing, incessantly, ever, constantly, assiduously. Terent.

Also, (2.) every where, in every place. Plaut. Mari terraque illas usque quaque querit. Cic. Ant undique religionem tolle, aut usque quaque conserva. Catull. Egnatius renidet usquequaque. Also; (3.) generally, in general. Cic. An hoc usque quaque aliter in vita? Also, (4.) always, ever, continually, at all times. Sueton. Religionum usquequaque contemptor. — Further, Usque adeo; as, Virgil. Non equidem invidio: miror magis; undique totis usque adeo turbatur agris, so continually; or to such a degree. — To this may be referred Usque when followed by dum, donec, quoad, h. e. ever — until; as, Cic. Mihi quidem usque (ever) curæ erit, quid agas, dum (until), quid egeris, sciero. (But Usquedum may be as long as — till, up to the time when, and in this sense come under the next head, which see.) — II. From the signification given above (in an uninterrupted course, without intermission, ever, &c.) follows a second, so long, when usque is followed by the particles, dum, donec, quoad. — In the first place, when these particles mean till, until: thus, Cic. Mihi usque (so long) curæ erit, quid agas, dum (till), quid egeris, sciero. Plaut. Ibo odorans usque, donec persecutus vulpem ero vestigiis. Cic. Usque illum quoad ei nuntiatum esset, &c., commentatum fuisse. So, also, Usque quo, so long — till. Varr. — Secondly, when these particles mean so long as or all the while that: as, Cic. Duces domi suæ usque, dum licuerit, tenuisse, h. e. so long as while, all the while that. Terent. Usque id egi dudum, dum loquitur pater. Varr. Usque, quoad. We find, also, in Terent. Usque dum ille, &c. — usque (ego) dabo, &c. h. e. so long as he, &c. — so long will I, &c. — III. From the same signification (in one course, right on, without intermission, &c.) follows a third sense, which may be expressed by all the way. This may answer either to the question, whence? where from? from how far? or to the question, whither? how far? and we may render it, all the way, even, quite, as far as. Thus, Cic. Usque a mari supero Roman proficisci. Id. Usque a Dianio ad Sinopen navigaverunt. Id. Usque ex ultima Syria navigare. Also, after the preposition; as, Virg. Classem prospexit ab usque Pachyno. Tacit. Animalia maris oceano ab usque petiverat. So with istic; as, Cic. Quod eos usque istic ex auditos putem, heard even (from) where you are. Further, Cic. Usque in Pamphyliam legatos misissent. Id. Trans Alpes usque. Id. Dona usque ad Numantium misit ex Asia. Ovid. Admorant usque sub ora faces. The preposition is, however, omitted before the accus. of names of towns (though sometimes retained); as, Cic. Usque Romam. Terent. Miletum usque. Juvenal. Omnibus in terris, quæ sunt a Gadibus usque Auroram. Also, in other instances; as, Justin. Terminos usque Libyæ. Id. Usque extremos Orientis terminos. So, Cels. Usque diem. Liv. Usque initium. Plin. Ab eo usque Jovem. And even of persons; Sat. Ab astris descendit vos usque. And with adverbs of place; as, Plin. Usque illo. — When used of time

(of which some examples have been given), we have both constructions, usque a and usque ad; as, *Cic. Opinio jam usque ab heroicis ducta temporibus, from as far back as the heroic ages, all the way from the heroic ages. Id. Usque a Thale enumerasti sententias philosophorum. Id. Inde usque repetens. Liv. Usque in adventum ejus tenuit urbem. Cic. Usque ad extremum vite permanere, to the very last of life. Id. Usque ad eum finem, dum, &c. l. e. so long — till (see II.). Terent. Usque adhuc (see I.). Virg. Serite hordea usque sub extremum brumæ imbre. Also, by transposition, *Gell. Ad usque ludibria. Cic. Inde usque (see above). And without ad; as, Usque diem (see above). — Usque ad also implies a certain point, neither of place nor time; thus, Terent. Te in pistrinum dedam usque ad necem, till you die of it. Plin. Ep. Assenserunt omnes usque ad Pompeiam, h. e. all with the exception of Pompeius, every one but Pompeius. — With usque (until, so far, all the way) are joined the particles adeo, co, quo: (1.) Usque adeo, so long, so far (followed by the particles donec, quoad, dum, in the sense of till, and also as); as, *Plaut. Non destiti instare usque adeo, donec, &c. Cic. Usque adeo in periculo fuisse, quoad, &c. Plaut. Adeo usque, satietatem dum capiet. But, Terent. Usque adeo illius ferre possum verba, verba dum sicut, so long — ns. — But also, so, to such a degree, so far; Cic. Usque adeo orba fuit, ut, &c. — (2.) Usque eo, so far; as, *Auct. B. Afric. accedere. Cic. Liciti sunt usque eo, quoad, &c. so far. Id. Inferiorem esse patitur usque eo, ne, &c. so far, to that extent. — Also, so far or so long; as, Cic. Usque eo, donec; or, Cic. and Liv. Usque eo, dum; or, Cic. Usque eo, quoad, h. e. so long — till, as long as — till. Cic. Usque eo jocari, antequam Chrysoگونum nominavi, so long — before, or so long — till (but Ernesti puts the eo in brackets). — Also, so very, so very much, to such a degree; as, Cic. Non usque eo improbus, not so bad as all that. Id. Usque eo illa a vitæ consuetudine abhorrebant. Also, with ut; as, Cic. Usque eo visum est indignum, ut, &c. — (3.) Usque quo, so far as, up to what place. Plin. Qui subeat, usque quo placuerit. Pandect. Libertates, usque quo Falcidia permittit, suam habent potestatem, so far as, to what extent (where it may also be as long as). — Also, so long as (see above). — Also, up to what time, so long — till, until. Varr. Usque quo ad tertiam partem decoxit. Pallad. Usque quo incipit gemina esse suspecta. Hence, Quo usque, or Quousque, which see. — ¶ In Liv. 6, 38. Quoad usque ad nostram memoriam certatum est, quoad usque must not be taken together, but usque ad, down to our times. — ¶ Semper designates time as a space of time: Usque, on the other hand, as a continued line which has a beginning somewhere. Or, Usque, in one course, right on, denotes a progression or advance in time: Semper, always, forever, a permanent state.*

cise, practise. Cæs. Usu nauticarum rerum ceteros antecedunt. Cic. Usus frequens. Id. Assiduus usus. Cæs. Quotidiano usu. Liv. Usu belli. Tacit. Ars et usus. (But in some of these passages it may be rendered experience.) — Also, utility, usefulness, use, advantage, profit, benefit, good. Cic. Arborum consectio magnos usus affert ad navigia faciendâ. Sallust. Neque quisquam omnium libidini simul et usui paruit, interest or advantage. Cels. Sine usu, without use or advantage, to no purpose. Plin. Radix cicutæ nullius usus (est), is good for nothing (but this may be referred as well to the first signif.). Sallust. fragm. Quorum (hominum) vulgus in dies usum habet, is served by, derives benefit from. Cic. Alicui magno usui esse, to be of great use or service to some one. Liv. Peritos legum ad condenda nova jura usui fore, would be of use or service for. Cæs. Una erat magno usui res, of great use, service, or benefit. So, Cic. Ex usu esse (with accus. and infin.), to be profitable. And, Plin. (with infin.). Also, Terent. Nec magis ex usu tuo nemo est. Also, use, custom. Cic. Communi in usu. Plin. Ep. Est mihi in usu (with an infin.), it is my custom (see above). Plin. In usum venire, to become usual. Also, usage or custom of speech. Horat. Ar. Poet. 71. — Also, intimacy, familiarity with any one. Cic. Cum Metellis erat ei non modo hospitium, verum etiam domesticus usus et consuetudo. Id. Inter nosmet vetus usus intercedit. Id. Est hospes meus, et præterea conjunctus magno usu familiaritatis. Ovid. Longo cognitus usu. Plin. Paneg. In usu habere aliquem, to be intimate with any one. — Also, experience, practice in a thing, expertness, skill. Cæs. Magnum usum in re militari habere. Id. militaris. Id. Habere usum belli. Id. Imperator nullius usus. Ovid. Seris venit usus ab annis, skill, practice. — ¶ Also, need, necessity, occasion. Cic. Sed de ceteris studiis alio loco dicemus, si usus fuerit. Cæs. Si usus veniat. Plaut. Si quis usus venerit. Also, wants, needs, necessities, necessary things. Cic. Usum provinciæ supplere. Liv. Quæ usus belli poscunt. Hence, Horat. Pauper enim non est, cui rerum suppetit usus, h. e. the necessaries of life, res, quibus in vita utimur. — Hence, Usus est often signifies there is need, there is occasion, it is requisite, it is necessary. Terent. (Me.) Mihi sic est usus (I must do so): (Ch.) An cuiquam est usus homini, se ut cruciet (is there need of any man's tormenting himself?) (Me.) Mihi (there is need of my doing it). Cic. Si usus fuerit (see above). The thing necessary is also put in the abl.; as, Cic. Naves quibus usus non est, of which there is no need, which are not needed. Virg. Nunc viribus usus, now there is need of, now you must exert. Liv. Naves quibus consuli usus non esset, which the consul did not need. Plaut. Usus nihil erat dicto. Also, in the acc.; as, Plaut. Ad eam rem usus est hominum astutum. Also, in the gen.; as, Liv. Alii accipiunt imperia, alii offerunt se, si quo usus operæ sit (unless we render usus, usefulness, h. e. if their services should be useful for any thing). — Usus is also, a case, chance, hap, accident. Terent. Usus non veniet, that will never happen. Cic. Si usus fuerit (see above). Cæs. Si usus veniat (see above). Hence, Usu, by a chance or accident, or, perchance, peradventure. Plaut. Cave, ne tu te usu perdis. Especially is Usu venire frequent, to take place or fall out by some chance, or somehow; or simply, to come about, take place, happen, befall, occur. Cic. USUVENIRE, or more properly USU VE-
3 NIRE, &c. See Usus, at the end.

UT, or ΟΥΤ (ὄντι), adv. and conj. I. ADV. when it does not of itself require the subjunctive mood. — ¶ As, like or just as, even as, ὡσπερ, καθάπερ. Followed by sic; as, Cic. Ut non omne vinum, sic non omnis ætas vetustate coacescit, as (like as, just as). So, Nepos. Ut enim Romæ Consules, sic Carthagine reges creabantur. Or by ita; as, Terent. Ut quisque suum vult esse, ita est, as every man wishes his own son to be, so he is. Cic. Ut optasti, ita est. Or by item instead. Cic. The ut is also preceded by the sic or ita; as, Terent. Sic siet modo, ut nunc est. Id. Ita, ut res sese habet, narrato. So, Id. Isto modo, ut tu. Id. Servi mei si me isto pacto metuerent, ut te metuunt cives tui. Also, Ut si, for si; as, Horat. Quod vitium afore, ut si quid promittere de me possum aliud vere, promitto. So, Sucton. Abstinet alieno, ut si quis unquam. (But in both these examples there seems to be an ellipsis.) — Ut — ita (sic) means as — so, in the sense of both — and also, not only — but also; as, Cass. ad Cic. Dolabellam, ut Tarsenses, ita Ladicenii accesserunt. And also, for quidem (indeed, or also although) — sed (but, but yet); as, Nepos. Ut naturam fautricem habuerat in tribuendis animi virtutibus, sic maleficam nactus est in corpore fingendo, as — so, although — yet. Liv. Saguntini ut a preliis quietem habuerant, ita non cessaverant ab opere, had indeed enjoyed relief from battles, but yet had not, &c.; though — yet (compare Ovid. Met. 1, 370). — Also, with the superl. Ut — ita, so, as, or sometimes, the — the, with the compar. in English; especially when joined with quisque (for aliquis); as, Cic. Ut quisque optime Græce sciret, ita esse nequissimum, the better a man knew Greek, the worse man he was. Id. Ut quidque primum gestum erit, ita primum exponetur. Also, with ita before ut; as, Cic. Colendum esse ita quemque maxime, ut quisque maxime virtutibus erit ornatus. Also, without ita; as, Cic. Ut quisque maxime perspicit, quid in re quaque verissimum sit, quique celerrime potest videre rationem, is prudentissimus haberi solet (where the omission is owing to the intervention of qui). Also, without both ita and the superl.; as, Liv. 30, 10. Ut quæque retro, &c. — In oaths or in wishes expressed in a similar form; Ut, as, as sure as, preceded by ita; so that we have Ita, ut, so true or sure — as, so truly do I wish that, &c. — as. Cic. Ita Deos mihi velim propitios, ut commoveor animi, as surely as I would be blessed by heaven, so surely am I troubled in spirit; may the gods bless me, as, &c. Id. Ita vivam, ut facio. The member with ut is also omitted; as, Cic. Sæpe, ita me dii juvent, te desideravi, often, so help help me heaven, &c. — ¶ Also, without the corresponding sic, ita, &c., as, so as, according as. Cic. Ut opinor, as I think. Id. Ut dixi, as I have said. Id. Ut alunt, as they say, as the saying is. Id. De nullo, ut disertio, memoriæ proditum est, as an eloquent man, as being eloquent. Id. Non ille ut plerique, sed isto modo ut tu. Tacit. Regem, ut exterrum, aspernabatur. Nepos. Elatus est, ut ipse præscriperat, sine ulla pompa funeris. Terent. Præsertim ut nunc sunt mores, especially as morals now are, in the present state, &c. Cic. Illi quidem, ut populi Rom. ætas est, senes; ut Atheniensium sæcula numerantur, adolescentes. So, Id. Themistocles, ut apud nos, perantiquus; ut apud Athenienses, non ita sane vetus, h. e. according to our reckoning, according to our dates. Id. Multæ etiam, ut in homine

Romano, litteræ, for a Roman; considering that he was a Roman. Id. Ut potui, tui, as well as I could. Plaut. Ut (how? see below) valet? (R.) Ut queo, how do you do? — as (well as) I can. Hence, Ut si, as if, as though; as, Cic. Ejus negotium sic velim suscipias, ut si esset res mea, just so — as if. Nepos. Atque, ut si bono animo fecissent, laudavere consilium eorum, as if they had, &c. — Ut is also doubled, or has cumque appended to it, and then it means howsoever, in what way or manner soever, however. Terent. Ut ut erant alia, illi certe consuleres. Cic. Ut cumque se affectum volet. — ¶ Also, as, with the superl. for quam; as, Cic. Ut blandissime potest, as favourably as he can, in the most favouring manner. — ¶ Also, as, for instance, as for instance, for example, as for example; as, Cic. Ea percipere quæ tactu intimo sentiant, ut dolorem, ut voluptatem. Id. Ut, si quis ægre ferat, as (for example), if any one, &c. — ¶ Also, as, as being; inasmuch as, in explanation and proof. Liv. Pama tumultum; ut principe amisso, fecit. Horat. Horret onus ut parvo corpore majus. Particularly with qui, quæ, quod, h. e. as who; as being the man, &c. who, inasmuch as he, &c. Liv. Tunc, enim, ut qui ex æquo nos venisse in amicitiam meminissimus, subjecti minus vobis essentus, as remembering that we had, &c. Cic. Quod sepulchrum posterorum ejus sit, uti quod sepulchrum publice datum est, as being a sepulchre given by the state. — ¶ Ut is also used redundantly before qui, quæ, quod; as, Liv. Prælium, ut quod maxime (sc. commissum est), pari spe utrinque commissum est (but this may be, if ever battle was, or as ever was). So, also, Liv. Sine ulla sede, ut quo victores nos reciperemus, for quo nos, &c. On the other hand we find ut qui, for ut. Plaut. — ¶ Also, as, when, as soon as. Cic. Ut hæc audivit, sic exarsit, &c. Terent. Ut numeratur forte argentum, intervenit homo, as or when. Hence, Ut primum, as soon as; as, Cic. Ut primum loqui posse cepi. Ovid. Ut subito Hymen venit, as soon as; or also, when suddenly. Cic. Ut semel e Piræo eloquentia evecta est, when once. (Ut and ut primum in this signification are usually joined with the indic. perf. in direct narrative.) — Also, has ut the sense of since, for which we may also say that; as, Calpurn. Vigesima non fuit, ut cupiunt te, cernere sylvæ. Ovid. Ut sumus in Ponto, ter frigore constitit Ister. Id. Ut careo vobis. Cic. Ut illos libros edidisti, nihil a te postea accepimus. Horat. Qui (dies) primus risit, per urbes Afer ut Italas equavit. — ¶ Also, where. Catull. 11, 3; 17, 10. — ¶ Also, how, h. e. in what way or manner. Cic. Credo te audisse, ut me circumsteterint. Id. Videte, ut hoc correxerit. Id. Videtisne, ut eos agitent Furie? Virg. Infandum, regina, jubes renovare dolorem (sc. narrando), Trojanas ut opes eruerint Danaï. — Hence in exclamations, expressions of wonder, how! Cic. Ut contempsit, ac pro nihilo putavit, quæ! &c. Horat. Ut gaudet! Virg. Ut vidi, ut perii! ut me malus abstulit error! when (as soon as) I saw her, how was I lost! Horat. Ut melius, quidquid erit, pati! how much better! Cic. Ut ille tum humilis erat! — Also, how, in a question. Horat. Ut valet? ut meministi nostri? — II. CONJ. h. e. when it requires of itself a subj. mood. — ¶ In the sense of that, after talis (and is for talis), tantis, tot, tam, adeo, sic, ita, and the like; and after verbs and substantives which denote a willing, wishing, entreating, admonishing, doing, taking care, permitting, commanding, impelling, a necessity, &c. Thus, Cic. Non sum ita hebes, ut istuc dicam, I am not so dull that I should say (h. e. as to say). Id. Quis est tam cupidus, ut non illa omnia relinquat, that he would not leave, as not to leave. Id. Est ulla res tanti, ut viri boni nomen amittas? Id. Providēbo, ut in perpetua pace esse possitis. Id. Furnio mandavi, ut exigeret cum eo. Poll. ad Cic. Lepidus me urisit, ut legionem mitterem, urged me to send the legion. Cic. Te obsecro, ut rempubl. liberetis. And so innumerable other examples. — Ut is also used by Cic. after Ad pedes accidere, because the idea of supplication lies in these words. We find it also after Inusitatum est, and after Certum est (where otherwise we find the accus. with infin.). Cic. Also, *Nepos. Verum est, ut. Cic. Verisimile est, ut. Id. Accedit ut, h. e. to this is added, that. Id. Integrum est, ut. Id. Reliquum est, ut. Id. Nata est sententia Academicorum, ut dicerent, &c. Id. Probari potest, ut. Liv. Quod in morem venerat, ut, &c. Id. Neque, uti referent, senatui obsequabantur. Also after esse; as, Cic. Est, ut deceat, for decet. Id. Fuit, ut liceret, for licuit. Particularly after comparatives; as, Cic. Videtur esse altius, quam ut id suscipere possimus, to be too high for us to be able to undertake. Quintil. after magis. Also after facio; as, Cic. Invitus feci, ut Flaminius egerem, h. e. invitus eeci, it was with reluctance that I expelled Flaminius. Id. Milites faciunt inviti, ut coronam dent civicam. Id. Faciam ut eam. — Ut is often wanting, for instance, after necesse est, oportet, rogo, &c. Also after permitto, Liv.; after sino, Liv.; after concedo, Cntull. — ¶ Also, that, in order that, to the end that. Cic. Si idcirco sedetis, ut, &c. Id. Ut vere dicam, that I may speak the truth; to say the truth. Id. Ut ita dicam, so to speak. — ¶ Ut also has the force of so that, on account of the omission of some correlative particle; as, Cic. Est autem oratio scripta elegantissime, ut nihil possit ultra. Nepos. Fuit disertus, ut nemo Thebanus ei par esset eloquentia. — So also, that therefore, that accordingly, in drawing an inference; we may render it, so that. Cic. Itaque alter semper magnus, alter sepe turpissimus: ut, recte precipere videantur, qui, &c. Id. Ut dubitare debeat nemo, so that no one ought to doubt. — ¶ Also, in expressions of anxiety, that or if. Terent. Ut satis contemplata modo sis. — ¶ Also, in wishes, O that! would that! that only! Cic. Ut dolor pariat, quod jam diu parturit! Terent. Ut te dii perduint! — ¶ Also, supposing that, in case that, granting that, for which we can also say although, even though. Cic. Ager efficit cum octavo, bene ut agatur; verum, ut (supposing that, provided that) omnes dii adjuvent, cum decimo. Id. Sine quo, ut reliqua ex sententia succedant, vix, &c. Id. Ut ita sit. Ovid. Ut desint vires, tamen est laudanda voluptas. Juvenal. Ut vigeant sensus animi, ducenda tamen, &c. even supposing that, even though. — ¶ Also, to explain a word or sentence, that, that namely, that to wit, when to wit. Cic. Ab hoc genere largitionis, ut aliis detur, aliis auferatur, aberunt ii. — ¶ Also, that, in the sense of why. Cic. Mil. 13. Erat, ut ille odisset, there was reason for his having hated, &c. — ¶ Also, with the force of that not, after verbs of fearing; thus, after timeo, Cic.; after metuo, Terent.; after vereor, Cic. — ¶ It is often used in impassioned interrogation, where, however, it is difficult to express it by translation. Cic. Quamquam quid loquor? Te ut ulla res frangat? Te ut unquam te corrigas? (which may be rendered, will you ever correct yourself? here we may suppose an ellipsis of fieri potest, or the like, can it be that you will ever mend your ways?) Plaut. Egone illam ut non amem, shall not I love her? — ¶ Uti, for ut, is of frequent use. Cic. and Cæs. — We find ut with the indicative in Liv. 27, 49. Ut inquit: but this is owing to the distance of the one from the other. So, also with the infin.; as, Liv. 5, 15: but this is to be laid to the same cause. — Ut is also repeated, especially when many words intervene; as, Liv. Ut quibus — essent, ut hic, &c. — We find often also ut non, and ut ne, either together or with words between, which may be rendered, that — not, though they are not entirely convertible. Cic. and Terent. We find also ut non, for quin. Cic. *Fin. 1, 8. Very rarely is ut non used for ne; Cic. Leg. Manil. 15. Itaque, ut plura non dicam, for ne plura dicam. — Quod ut, similar to quod si, quod nisi, &c. Virg. (See Quod) — Ut quid? for cur. Tertull. UTCUMQUE, or UTCUNQUE (ut & cumque), adv. howsoever, however; also, any how, somehow. Cic. Utcumque animi audientis moveri volet, ita, &c. Liv. Utcumque erit, juvabit tamen, &c. however that shall be, be it as it may. Tacit. Cetera utcumque facillius dissimulari. Vellei. Difficilis est utcumque conceptæ spei mora, howsoever, h. e. any how. Plin. Ep. Utcumque animum collegi, as well as possible. — ¶ Also, whensoever, at whatever time. Horat. Utcumque mecum vos eritis, whenever, whilist.

UTENSILIS (utor), e, adj. that may be used, fit for use, χρηστόδης, especially for family use, for food, for instance. *Varr. Utensilia, ium, n. things fit for use; the necessaries of life; utensils, implements. Colum. Utensilia, quibus aut alitur hominum genus, aut etiam excollitur. Tacit. UTENTYÖR. See Utor.

UTER, for Uterus. See Uterus.

UTER (allied to uterus), utris, m. a skin, for wine, oil, &c. *ἀράδος, ἀράκη. Virg. Mollibus in pratis unctos saliere per utres. Plaut. vini, a skin full of wine. Ovid. Æolus Ithacis inclusimus utribus Euros, h. e. scripsimus de Æolis Euris Ithacis utribus inclusis (referring to the story that Ulysses received the winds from Æolus inclosed in bags; so that he might direct his course at pleasure). — Figur. Horat. Tumidis infla sermonibus utrem. — ¶ Utria (plur.) is found in Liv. *Andron.

UTER (ὑτέρος, ὑτέρος), ūtra, ūtrum, gen. utrius, dat. utri, adj. *which or whether of the two, or which (when one of two is meant, sometimes interrogatively. Cic. Uter nostrum popularis est? tunc, an ego? Sometimes, also, the interrogative particle ne is joined with it redundantly. Horat. Uterne ad casus dubios fidet sibi certius? hic qui, &c. an qui, &c.? Also, not interrogatively. Cic. Ut eligas, utrum velis. Liv. Querite utra graviore servitute liberati sint. Ovid. Tu servare potes, tu perdere solus amantem: elige utrum facias. — Uter is usually joined with the compar. Cic. Utrius oratio propius accedere, &c. But also with a superl. Utri potissimum consulendum sit. — Uter is sometimes joined with a plur.; as, *Plaut. Loquere, uter meruistis culpam, paucis. Id. Uter eratis, tui, an ille major? — Uter is also used of more than two; thus, of three. Vitruv. — Also, followed by the particle an, as utrum; as, Cic. Utros habueris libros, an utrosque, nescio, which of the two books (h. e. sets of books, corpora librorum, which accounts for the plur.) you have, or whether you have both. — ¶ Also, the other, when two things are spoken of, and usually when preceded by uter or neuter. Cic. Uter (which of the two) utri (the other) insidias fecerit. Horat. Ambigitur quoties, uter utro sit prior, aufert Pacuvius. Plaut. Neuter utri invidet. — ¶ Also, both. Cic. Sibi uter rapiat an alter cedat alteri? Id. Controversiarum, quæ essent inter oratorem et decumanum, si uter velit, recuperatores, &c. (but this may be one or the other). — ¶ Also, one of the two, the one or the other; (see the preceding meaning.) — ¶ Also, for utrumque, whichever (of the two). Cic. Utrum horum dixeris, in eo culpa hærebis. — ¶ The penult of the gen. is properly long, but is also found short. Horat. — ¶ *Utro, and Utrum, are also adv., which see.

UTERCOLUS (dimin. of uterus), i, m. a small paunch or belly, as, of bees. Plin. UTERCOLUS (dimin. of uter), i, m. a small leathern bag or bottle. Apul. UTERCUMQUE, or UTCUNQUE (uter, with the termination cum (m) que), ūtracum (n) que, utrumcum (n) que, adj. whichever of the two, ὑτέρος ὑτέρος. Cic. Magnæ utrinque copiæ ita paratæ ad pugnandum esse dicuntur, ut, utrumque vicerit, non sit mirum futurum, whichever of the two may (may have) conquered. Id. In quo bello utrumque pars vicisset, tamen aliqua forma esset futura reipublicæ. Quintil. In utrumque lingua expressa proprietates omnium litterarum, whichever of the two, both.

Utrumlibet elige, alterum incredibile est, alterum nefarium, choose which you will. Plin. Sanguinem fluentem ex utralibet parte sistit. — Hence, Utralibet, and Utrilibet, adv. which see.*

UTERNE, ūtrâne, utrumne. See Uter. UTERQUE (uter & que), ūtraque, ūtrūque, gen. ūtrūque, dat. ūtrūque, adj. *both the one and the other, both (but see Uteruis, at the end), ἑκάτερος, ἀμφοτέρως. Cic. Paria in utroque (homine). Id. Uterque nostrum, both of us, we both. Id. Horum uterque cecidit victus, h. e. hi ambo ceciderunt. Id. Horum utrumque conjunctum, both of these, both these. Ovid. Pari fastigio steterit in utraque fortuna, h. e. both when possessed of a large, and when of a small fortune. Or, *Tacit. Utraque fortuna, good and bad fortune. Cic. In utramque partem, h. e. on both sides; in either case. Cæs. Hac in utramque partem disputatio habita, h. e. for and against, pro and con. Cic. In utramque partem respondere, h. e. to answer yes and no; to affirm and deny. Terent. Vehemens in utramque partem, in both directions, both ways. — ¶ Uterque stands for alter, the other, when preceded by uterque; as, *Terent. Uterque utriusque est cordi, each — to the other. Cæs. Quum uterque utriusque esset exercitus in conspectu. — ¶ Uterque is also joined with a plur. word, as, Terent. Curem uterque. Plaut. Uterque insaniant. Ovid. Utraque (fem.) festinant. Tacit. Uterque ambigui (erant). — ¶ When only two persons or things are spoken of, the sing. is sufficient; but when two parties, kinds, or collective bodies are spoken of, the plur. is used; as, Terent. Hoc beneficio utriusque ab utrisque vero devincimini, h. e. vos puellæ et amatores vestri. Cic. Quoniam utriusque et Socratici et Platonicus esse volumus, h. e. Peripatetici et Academici. Id. A quibus utrisque submittitur aliquid, h. e. a poetis, et ab iis, qui modos fecerunt. Sallust. Utriusque (h. e. plebs et senatus) victoriam crudeliter exercebant. Dionysii majoris et minoris. Virg. Palmas utrasque tetendit. Tacit. Utriusque in tuens, h. e. avum et aviam. Terent. Minus habeo virium, quam vestrum utervis, either of you (two). Id. Utrumvis se facere posse. — ¶ Also, both alike. Terent. In ut rem utrumvis dormire. — ¶ Utervis and quivis thus differ from uterque and quisque, that they suppose of two or all, only one, to whom the predicate is attributed, but that one indifferently taken. On the other hand, though uterque and quisque point to each single individual (therein differing from ambo and omnes), yet the predicate belongs to the individuals at the same time and collectively. When, therefore, a predicate belongs to every one of two or more, but only to one at a time, we find utervis and quivis, not uterque and quisque. Compare Quivis.

ON THE RECKONING OF TIME

AMONG THE ROMANS.*

I. The Roman Day.

THE civil day, with the Romans, as with us, extended from midnight to midnight, so that two persons whose birth fell between these two limits were considered as born on the same day. But in the division of time by hours, we do not find the same agreement between their method and our own. For the hours, with us, run on in one course from midnight to noon, and again from noon to midnight, and, making no account of the fluctuating duration of the natural day and night, that is, the day and night as bounded by sunrise and sunset, are of the same length the year through. The Romans, on the contrary, divided the natural day and the natural night into twelve hours each; the first hour of the day beginning with sunrise, and the first hour of the night from sunset. Accordingly, as the summer days are longer than winter days, the summer day-hours must have been in the same proportion longer than those of winter, and, for a similar reason, the summer night-hours shorter than those of winter. Suppose then, we learn that an event took place at a certain Roman hour of the day or night; in only two cases can we, without further data, reduce the time to our hours. The Roman midday and midnight, which fall at the close of the sixth hour of day and of night, are our midday and midnight, since these are natural, not civil, points of time. In all other cases, we need to be informed also of the length of the day. Now this depends upon the latitude of the place and the time of the year. When these are given, the length of the day may be determined by a mathematical computation. It is common however to begin the day, on a rough estimate, at six o'clock; but this can be correct only at the equinoxes, and at the solstices is far out of the way. The subjoined table, calculated for the latitude of Rome ( $41^{\circ} 54'$ ), may be of some use in the reduction of Roman time to ours. It takes the year 45 B. C., the first of the reformed calendar of Julius Cæsar, and gives the length of the Roman day for the eight principal points of the sun's course, reduced to our uniform hours:—

Places of the Sun.	Days of the Year.	Length of the Day.	Sunrise.	Sunset.	Length of a Roman Hour.
$0^{\circ}$ ♄	23 December.	8h. 54m.	7h. 33m.	4h. 27m.	0h. 44 1-2m.
$15^{\circ}$ ♀	6 February.	9 50	7 5	4 55	0 49 1-6
$0^{\circ}$ ♀	23 March.	12	6	6	1
$15^{\circ}$ ♂	9 May.	14 10	4 55	7 5	1 10 5-6
$0^{\circ}$ ☊	25 June.	15 6	4 27	7 33	1 15 1-2
$15^{\circ}$ ☋	10 August.	14 10	4 55	7 5	1 10 5-6
$0^{\circ}$ ♄	25 September.	12	6	6	1
$15^{\circ}$ ♀	9 November.	9 50	7 5	4 55	0 49 1-6

If we would know, for instance, when the Romans supped on the longest day, supposing this to take place at the beginning of the ninth hour (see Martial. 4, 8.), we have, according to the foregoing table, 8 Roman hours equal to 10h. 4m. Since on that day the sun rose at 4h. 27m., the ninth Roman hour commenced at 2h. 31m. P. M. On the shortest day, it began at 1h. 29m. P. M.

In camp, the night was divided into four watches, of three (Roman) hours each. The second accordingly closed at midnight.

II. The Roman Month and Year.

It is well known that Julius Cæsar reformed the calendar, and gave it the shape which, with slight modifications, it still retains. It may be well, however, before giving an account of the Julian year, to say a little of the year

* Abridged from Ideler's Handbuch der mathematischen und technischen Chronologie, 2 Band 6 Abschn. Zeitrechnung der Roemer

such as he found it. The common Roman year, when he undertook the rectification of the calendar, consisted of 355 days, distributed among twelve months in the following manner:—

 Januarius...29 days ;	Maius.....31 days ;	September...29 days ;
Februarius..28 “	Junius.....29 “	October....31 “
Martius.....31 “	Quintilis....31 “	November...29 “
Aprilis.....29 “	Sextilis.....29 “	December...29 “

In earlier times, the year began with Martius. It will be seen that this year was considerably shorter than the solar year ; so that, if no correction were applied, each month would be continually going the round of all the seasons. Januarius would be at one time in the dead of winter, at another in midsummer. This was attempted to be remedied by means of an intercalary month, called Mercedonius, consisting alternately of 22 and 23 days, which was thrown in at the close of February of every second year, namely after the 23d of that month, the anniversary of the Terminalia, originally the closing festival of the year. The first months of an intercalary year would therefore stand thus:—

 Januarius.....29 days ;
Februarius.....23 “
Mercedonius..22 or 23	{ which, added to the five days taken from Martius.....31 “	{ Februarius, make a total of 27 or 28 days ;

and so on, as above. Four years, upon this plan, would contain 1465 days, or four days more than a Julian quadriennium. Here, then, was an average annual excess of one day, which required a further correction. How this was applied is not satisfactorily ascertained, though there are indications of a cycle of 24 years, in theory, if not in use. But had the calendar been perfectly correct in theory, and much better adapted to practice than it really was, the mismanagement to which it was subjected would inevitably have perverted it. The direction of the intercalation was left to the pontifices, who did not scruple to consult private interest at the expense of the public convenience. When Julius Cæsar set about his work of reformation, the first of January had retrograded nearly to the autumnal equinox. Accordingly we find, in the year 705, Cicero writing to Atticus, under date of the 16th of May (XVII Kal. Jun.), in these words, — Nunc quidem æquinotium nos moratur. The Roman 16th of May of that year has been computed to correspond to the Julian 24th of March, which was in fact the day before the vernal equinox.

Cæsar, in order to bring the first of January to the place it was to hold, was obliged to make a year of 445 days, in which, besides the Mercedonius of 23 days, which was inserted in its usual place, two extraordinary intercalary months, making a sum of 67 days, were thrown in between the 29th of November and the first of December. When therefore we find Cicero, in the year 708, speaking of a. d. V. Cal. Intercalares priores, we are to understand hereby the 26th of November of that year, as it was actually reckoned, or the 23d of September of the anticipated Julian reckoning. This year is called the year of confusion.

The chief alteration effected by Cæsar was the abolition of the Mercedonius, and the distribution of the ten days, which had hitherto been lacking, among some of the other months. But as his year was still too short by about a quarter of a day, which, in four years, would amount to a day, he provided for the insertion, every fourth year, of a day, immediately after the Terminalia or 23d of February. His corrected year, therefore, stood as follows:—

Januarius...31 days ;	Maius.....31 days ;	September..30 days ;
Februarius..28 “ in leap year 29 ;	Junius.....30 “	October....31 “
Martius.....31 “	Quintilis....31 “	November..30 “
Aprilis.....30 “	Sextilis.....31 “	December..31 “

The months Quintilis and Sextilis afterwards received the names of Julius and Augustus, in honor of the first two emperors. Simple as Cæsar's method was, the pontifices mistook it, and for some time went on to make the intercalation every third year. But Augustus finally corrected the error by omitting the intercalary day for twelve years in succession.

The Romans did not count the days of the month in a regular numerical succession, as we do, but reckoned them with reference to three principal points, the Calends (Calendæ), the Nones (Nonæ), and the Ides (Idus). The Calends were invariably the first of the month. In March, May, Quintilis (July), and October, the only months which, before Cæsar, had 31 days, the Nones were the seventh and the Ides the fifteenth of the month ; in all other months, the Nones were the fifth and the Ides the thirteenth ; so that the Nones were always eight days before the Ides. The Romans, after passing one of these points, counted forward to the next, calling the day after the Calends so many days before the Nones, the day after the Nones so many days before the Ides, and so on. Accordingly, the days were numbered back from each point to the preceding. By this arrangement, the last day of a month was called the day before the Calends of the next month ; thus the 31st of January was Pridie Calendas Februarias or Februarii, or Calendarum Februariorum or -ii ; for the names of the Roman months are properly adjectives, which, when used substantively, have mensis understood. The day before that, the thirtieth of January, was reckoned as the third day before the Calends of January (for the Romans counted in the current day), and was expressed by Tertio Calendas (sc. die ante) or Calendarum Februariorum or -arum, or, substantively, -ii ; or, more frequently, by ante diem tertium Calendas, or -arum, etc. Pursuing this process, we find the 14th of January (the day after the Ides) denoted by XIX Cal. Febr. or a. d. XIX Cal. Febr. We have now reached the Ides (Idus), which, in dating, take the ablative case; thus the ides of January are dated Idibus Januariis, or -ii, or by abbreviation Id. Jan. Then we have for the day before (the 12th), pridie Id. Jan.; for the day before that, III Id. Jan., or a. d. III Id. Jan.; and so on to the Nones, or Non. Jan. The day before the Nones is pridie Non. Jan.; the next, III Non. Jan., or a. d. III Non. Jan.; the second day of the month, a. d. IV Non. Jan.; the first day, Cal. Jan. The following table presents a scheme of the months of January, March, April, and February, of the common year. The months of Sextilis (August) and December are like January; May, Quintilis (July), and October, like March; and June, September, and November, like April.

The practical rule for reducing one of our dates to the Roman calendar is, when the day is between the Calends and Nones (unless it be the day before the Nones), to add one to the number of the Nones, and subtract the number of the given day: e. g. to find the Roman date of the second of June, we have,  $5+1-2=4$ ; so that the date required is, a. d. IV Non. Jun. When the day is between the Nones and Ides, a similar course is pursued: e. g. to find the expression for our tenth of August, we have  $13+1-10=4$ ; so that our date is, a. d. IV Id. Sext. (or Aug.) But if the day is after the Ides (unless it be the last day of the month), we add two to the number of days in the month, and subtract the number of the given day: e. g. it is required to find the Roman date of the 22 December; we have  $31+2-22=11$ ; so that the expression is, a. d. XI Cal. Jan. To reduce Roman dates to ours, we reverse the process just described, i. e. subtract the number of the Roman day: e. g. Augustus died XIV Cal. Sept.: to accommodate this to our calendar, we say,  $31+2-14=19$ ; so that the date required is the 19th of August. When a date is given as under the old calendar, the proper allowance must be made.

In order to avoid interfering with the celebration of the stated festivals of the year, Cæsar inserted his intercalary day in February in such a manner that no change was made in the reckoning of the first twenty-three days of the month: the last seven days run thus:—

23 a. d. VII Calendas Martias ;
 24 a. d. bissextum Cal. Mart. ;
 25 a. d. VI Cal. Mart. ;
 26 a. d. V " "

27 a. d. IV Cal. Mart. ;
 28 a. d. III " "
 29 pridie " "

So that the rule above given requires some modification in this case. To reduce a date of February in leap-year to the Roman date, for the first 23 days, proceed according to the prescribed rule, as if the month had only 28 days. For the last five days, proceed as if it had 29 days. The bissextum is always the 24th.

In Cæsar's calendar, the year was divided into eight periods. The points which marked these were thus entered :—

Bruma .....25th December ;	Solstitium .....24th June ;
Veris initium .....7th February ;	Autumni initium .....11th August ;
Æquinoctium vernum ...25th March ;	Æquinoctium autumni ..24th September ;
Æstatis initium .....9th May ;	Hiemis initium .....11th November.

In this arrangement, he intended to make the beginning of summer correspond with the heliacal rising of the Pleiades; that of winter with the cosmical setting of the same constellation; and that of autumn with the cosmical setting of the Lyre. The sign of the arrival of spring, with the Romans, was the blowing of the Favonius or warm west wind.

The week of seven days was not in use among the Romans under the republic, nor for a long time after Christ. It was brought in at length by the influence of Christianity. The Romans had however what may be called a week of eight days; for on every eighth day (nono quoque die, after the Roman way of speaking, whence the name nundinæ), the country citizen came into the city to transact business, and take part in public affairs. It was ordained that every proposed law should be posted up in public for three nundinæ or market-days (a trinundinum, as it was called, equal of course to 17 days), that all might read it. (See Nundinæ in the vocabulary.)

The year was designated at Rome by the names of its consuls. (See Consul in the vocabulary.) But in the works of Roman authors, the year of the city is also often mentioned. To reduce this to our reckoning, we must know in what year Rome was supposed to have been built. Cato fixed the foundation of the city in the year 752 B. C.; but Varro, whose computation is considered as more worthy of confidence, in the year 753 B. C. If now we have a year of the city given bearing a number less than 754, we have only to subtract the given number from 754 for the year B. C. In like manner, to reduce a given year before Christ to its corresponding Roman year, we subtract the number of the year from 754. If, on the other hand, the number of the Roman year exceeds 753, as it always does if the date be subsequent to the Christian era (for this era is regarded as a point of time, not as a year), we deduct 753 from the given number, and have for a remainder the year after Christ. If again we would find the year of the city corresponding to a given year after Christ, we add the number of this year to 753, and we get the year sought. For example, Cæsar was assassinated in the year of Rome 710; it is required to find the corresponding year B. C. Our rule gives  $754 - 710 = 44$ , the year required. Suppose we know that Cæsar's reformed calendar went into effect on the first of January, 45 B. C., and would reduce this to the year of Rome: we have, now,  $754 - 45 = 709$ . Herculaneum and Pompeii were buried A. D. 79. What year of Rome expresses this date? We have  $753 + 79 = 832$ . The emperor Augustus died A. U. C. 767: the corresponding year of our era is designated by  $767 - 753 = 14$ .

WHEN the Latin and English Lexicon, edited by the late Mr LEVERETT, was published, an English and Latin Lexicon was announced as being in preparation. This work has been carried forward with as much rapidity as was consistent with the plan on which it was constructed.

It cannot be expected that this second part should be either so new or so complete as the first. It is always much easier to render foreign into native words, than native into foreign. In the one case, each word, which is given as the signification of another, serves for a sign, which admits of a wide application; in the other, a word often points only to a single step. In the one, the unknown is expressed in terms of the known; in the other, the familiar is exhibited in the form of the unfamiliar. Besides this difficulty, common to all languages, there are peculiar obstacles to be overcome in conveying a modern language into an ancient. A living tongue is always pliant. It readily adopts and assimilates new expressions for new ideas, by giving a new tinge to words already in use, by naturalizing foreign terms, or by a direct creation. In this way it passes down from age to age, without growing old. A dead language, on the contrary, being no longer kept supple by daily use, is rigid and unyielding. Additions, instead of growing into its body, must often bear the appearance of appendages merely, and thus proclaim their own strangeness. Yet such additions must be made, or expression will be hampered by clumsy circumlocutions, and unwieldy descriptions take the place of significant names.

To contend successfully with these difficulties must needs require ripe scholarship, ample time and space, and useful auxiliary works. But, whether from too low an estimate of the importance of the task or an unwillingness to leave more attractive, and, perhaps, more lucrative studies, our scholars have not been active in this department. Those then, on whom the labor falls, can only do their best. So long a time had been consumed in the execution of the Latin and English Lexicon, that it was advisable to be as expeditious with the other as possible, and the volume was already so large that little room was left for what, if adequately performed, would demand at least another volume of equal size. The book, of which almost exclusive use has been made in preparing the part of this work that may be called new, is a late German and Latin Lexicon, by K. E. Georges. But this could be made available only by means of a circuitous and inconvenient process.

Notwithstanding these hinderances, it was hoped that something might be put together, which, though it could not but be imperfect, should at least be methodical and clear. As the same idea is often expressed by the use of different parts of speech in different connections, it seemed conducive to clearness, especially in so succinct a work, to bring derived words under their primitives, distinguished however by a smaller type. This has been, in some cases, extended to words not strictly derived, but only cognate. The objection to such a course is, that oftentimes so great a dislocation of alphabetical order is produced, as to render it difficult to find a word. This difficulty has been obviated, either by adhering in such cases to that order, or by giving the word under its primitive, and referring thither from its alphabetical place. The liberty has also been taken of omitting many words which seemed to be of slight importance. Some pages, thus arranged, were shown to Mr. Leverett, and met with his approval.

But it was soon found impossible, from the slowness with which the work advanced, even to carry out this plan, and it was accordingly broken off at the word Commence, on the fifty-sixth page. No course then remained but to take some manual already in use, and improve it, as far as was possible in a limited time. Ainsworth's Dictionary most readily presented itself, and the rest of this book, being about five-sixths of the whole, is made up mainly of that. The work of Ainsworth has many faults, so many, indeed, that to correct them entirely would be nearly as laborious as to make a new book. Among other things, it is so confusedly thrown together, that even what is there is not easily found. To this point attention has been chiefly directed. The whole has been wrought into a more orderly arrangement, which presents each part of speech by itself, and accords with what had been already finished. Sometimes, indeed, along with the derived signification of a word, are given those which are underived, though the word is printed as if it were wholly derivative. In these cases, perhaps, the parts of the word would have been better separated. But this circumstance will hardly produce any confusion. Though more care has been turned to the arrangement than to any other point, it was sometimes found to be so completely vicious, that a thorough correction was impossible, without a longer delay than was practicable. The arrangement, however, has been by no means the sole object of attention. Various other alterations, as many as time would allow, have been introduced throughout. Articles have been entirely, or almost entirely, written anew, and much that was incorrect or redundant has been stricken out. It is hoped that, in this form, the work may be found to have gained in usefulness.

A few abbreviations have been employed; as, prop. for properly, fig. for figuratively, gen. for generally, esp. for especially, and others which speak for themselves. When a word or words enclosed thus ( ) follow others, they belong only to the word or phrase next preceding, if no comma intervene; but if separated from that by a comma, they are to be referred to all which precede, until a fuller stop than a comma is reached. When a word or words so enclosed precede others, with an intervening comma, they are usually to be referred to all the words which follow, till others, similarly enclosed, occur. Thus, under the word Come, the words, (of persons), refer to what follows, down to (of things); and (prop. and fig.) belong both to venire and pervenire, while (come, arrive), belong only to advenire. But use will make these clearer.

AT is not always expressed separately, but is often a part of the meaning of some simple or compound word, or lies in a grammatical accident (for instance the ablat. case) or construction (e. g. the ablative absolute). Examples will be found below.

AT, of place, answering the question Where? In what? in; also ad, apud. But when the question is answered by the name of a town, we use the genit. if it be of the first or second declension and sing. number, the ablat. if it be of the third decl. or plur. number; this construction is extended also to domus and rus. — Examples: at school, in scholâ; at the forum, apud forum; at my house, domi apud me, domi mœæ, in domo mœâ; at home, domi; to live at a country-seat (or in the country), vivere ruri or also rure; oracles are delivered at Delphi, oracula Delphi redduntur; letters dated at Rome, literæ Romæ datæ; he died at Lacedæmon, Lacedæmone mortuus est. (The names of small islands are often construed like names of towns, but the larger ones are considered as countries, and their names require a preposition. Domus takes a preposition when joined with any adj. but meus, tuus, suus, noster, vester, alienus, or when the genit. of the owner's name is added.) — Further, you were that night at Lecca's house, fuisti apud Leccam eâ nocte; at the very threshold, in limine primo; memory lies at the bottom of the ear, est in aure inâ memoriæ locus. — To be at sea, mari navigare. —  $\Uparrow$  Also of place, in the sense of near, close by, ad, apud, juxta, propter, all of which require also a verb or participle expressive of the action; as, the battle at Conna, pugna ad Cannas commissa; the bridge at Geneva, pons, qui erat ad Geneviam; three hundred and six were slain at Cremera, cæsi apud Cremeram trecenti et sex; they place guards at the gates, custodes ad portas ponunt; you see guards at all the temples, præsidia pro templis omnibus cernitis. — To be at hand, sub manibus esse (of persons), ad manum or præ manibus esse (of things), ad manum or præ manu esse (of money, for instance); præsto esse, in promptu esse. — At the right hand, ad dextram, ad sinistram; at the right and left, dextrâ levâque. — A cask pierced at the bottom, dolium a fundo pertusum. — At the rear, a tergo. —  $\Uparrow$  At, equivalent to From, a, ab. — To begin at something, ordiri, initium ducere a re; I will begin at Romulus, incipiam a Romulo; I heard all these things at the door, omnia ego isthæc auscultavi ab ostio.

AT, of price, rate, worth, is expressed by the abl.; also by the genit.; as, to sell grain at the price of two sesterces, frumentum vendere hincis sestertis; what do you set it at? quanti indicas? they were provided at a small charge, parvo curata sunt; he lives at great expense, profusis sumptibus vivit. (When the price is definitely given, only the abl. can be used.)

AT, as used of time, sub (with the accus. in the sense of towards; with the ablat. of at the moment of); ad (immediately before); de (marking the commencement); in, per, inter, (to denote continuance, duration); the last two principally to show that something happens during something else: In answer to the question When? At what time? we find also the mere ablat.: this is especially the case with substantives which denote that after which a thing has happened; as, at one's departure, discessu alicujus. — At table, at supper, inter cœnam. — At sunset, solis occasu. — At (the moment of) sunrise, sub luce; at (i. e. just before) sunrise, sub lucem. — At sunrise, sole oriente. — At night, noctu or nocte, nocturno tempore; sub noctem (towards night); sub nocte (at the moment when night set in); per noctem, inter noctem, (the night through; during the night). — At early morn, multo mane. — At that time, eo tempore, also id temporis; also tunc, tunc temporis; tum. — At the right time, in tempore, also tempore; opportune. — At an early time, mature. — Cum is sometimes used to express at, where we also use with; he came at the first appearance of light, cum primâ luce venit; he went away at break of day, cum diluculo abiit. — At also refers to an appointed time or a time in view, and is rendered by ad; come at that time, venias ad id tempus; he did not bring the corn at the time appointed,
